Dear Peter,

Hope this email finds you well! With a number of ideas in mind, I'm writing to share some of my plans for the Cross-cultural Food Exhibition with you.

Various forms could be adopted to make the event colorful and diversive. Instead of simply focusing on its appearance, sparing some effort to explore the history of food may give viewers a more comprehensive picture of its cultural meanings. Moreover, providing hands-on experience in cooking and tasting is also worthy of consideration as it may promote cultural interactions, becoming an unforgettable experience for everyone involved.

How about meeting next Tuesday in the café where we could further discuss the arrangements and work distribution? Looking forward to your reply!

Dear Ben,

Fully acquainted with the fact that you were criticized for using AI to complete your assignments, I can easily empathize with you and would like to offer some advice.

Despite it being universally acknowledged AI that, AI is playing an increasingly crucial role in everyday life, applying it in homework may be inappropriate. Considering the ultimate goal is to sharpen your skills, relying on AI can lead you to miss out on personal development. Moreover, using AI in assignments may be associated with cheating, negatively impacting the whole class.

Therefore, it's crucial to adopt a cautious attitude towards AI and ensure the originality of your work. It's also advisable to turn to your teacher for specific rules.

I hope my suggestions may be of help to you.

Yours,

To my surprise, Ashley insisted on reporting the "Deerfield Stole Perry" story. Dismissing my objection, she simply explained that it is a golden chance to boost readership. Hardly able to contain my inner rage, I caught hold of her sleeves, declaring that under no circumstances would I accept such an act of irresponsibility! Lips bitten and face red, Ashley hesitated for a moment before she heaved a sigh and nodded with approval. The next few hours witnessed us collecting photos of Perry in the last ten years and writing an article expressing our thanks for his accompany and saying good bye to him.

Paragraph 2:

On Thursday, the paper came out with the headline "Bye-Bye, Perry" on the front page. At first, I was a bit nervous, fearing that such a report may escape public attention. However, my worries vanished as I saw crowds of people lining up to get a single copy. To our ecstasy, everyone seemed to be talking about the great parrot and our readership reached its highest in years! The following day, when meeting Ashley in the newsroom, I shared a secret smile with Ashley as we discussed the success in high spirits. It seems that no plotted stories could rival an article written with care and a sense of responsibility.

Para 1:

"I have an idea to stay warm," Tom shouted excitedly. Pointing at the penguins, he explained that they could join the penguins to stay warm. "But will they accept us?" Mary registered a look of doubt. However, much to her surprise, the penguins readily made enough space for them to enter as they approached. Despite the freezing temperature outside, it was surprisingly warm and cozy in the crowd. The kids watched in amazement as the penguins huddled, pushing in and out of the center in a highly organized order and the next few hours witnessed them staying safe and sound with the penguins.

Para 2:

Two and a half hours later, the parents returned with help. Burning with anxiety, they hurried to the lab, only to be shocked by the scene of the kids staying warm in the middle of a crowd of penguins. At the sight of their parents, the kids cried in relief as they ran to embrace them. After that, Tom poured out the whole story, affectionately stroking a penguin that had accompanied him and Mary credited Tom with helping them out with his knowledge. It seems that playful as they may seem, penguins could literally aid human survival when it comes to extreme temperature.
